

Dr. Nathaniel Edward Yorke-Davies “cured or killed people with medical precision in the Egyptian Navy. Then he began to think; and so he came to the study of dietetics; upon which matter he is now a great authority; whose practice and experience are asserted to have detained an army of patients in this weary world for a much longer time than they had expected. . . . He has written many books, and he is about to publish a work on the ‘Ailments of the Aristocracy and the Luxurious Classes’: of whom he should know something, since his patients are supposed to have covered all ranks, from Royalty downwards.... Altogether he is a cheery fellow very full of conversation, who can tell a good story. Moreover, he has plenty of enemies: which is mark of professional success.”

Vincent Brooks, Day & Son Ltd. lith.

“Dietetics”

Dr. Nathaniel Edward Yorke-Davies

Medical men of the day...